The International Bar Association (IBA) is the global voice of the legal profession. It is the world's leading organisation of international legal practitioners, bar associations and law societies. The work of the IBA began in 1947 in New York, alongside the founding of the United Nations (UN), in the firm belief that an association of the bars, the law societies and the lawyers of the world could make a difference to the cause, of justice and peace globally. The work of the IBA is concerned with the development and the upholding of international law. A fundamental belief of the IBA is that the interests of human rights and commercial prosperity share the same dependence on a stable environment for justice and the rule of law, in which people and their businesses can find the freedom to flourish.

The IBA has a membership of more than 80,000 individual lawyers and more than 190 bar associations and law societies spanning over 170 countries and has considerable expertise in providing assistance to the global legal community.
