0830 – 0845 Welcome remarks from the Conference Co-chairs and the IBA

0845 – 0945 Keynote address

Mr Aleksander Kwaśniewski played an important role in the country's integration into Western structures. A former student leader and journalist, he began his political career under communism in the Polish United Workers' Party. Following the democratic transition he co-founded the Social Democracy of the Republic of Poland and co-organised the Democratic Left Alliance.

As President, Mr Kwaśniewski was instrumental in guiding Poland into NATO (1999) and the European Union (2004). He championed the adoption of Poland's current Constitution (1997) and supported democratic reforms, regional cooperation, and European integration.

Keynote speaker

Aleksander Kwaśniewski former President of Poland (1995-2005), Warsaw

0945 – 1100 PLENARY SESSION ONE

Hot topics and new frontiers in employment relations: a CEE perspective

The CEE region stands at a critical juncture – confronting increasingly complex regulations, growing demands for workplace flexibility, and rapid AI-driven transformation. At the same time, employers must contend with pressing social challenges, including demographic ageing and labour migration.

This panel brings together private practitioners, in-house counsel, trade union representatives and policymakers to examine the key tensions shaping the contemporary employment landscape. Where does the law diverge from workplace reality? Is the region's traditional regulatory approach sufficient to bridge the gap between legislative expectations and business needs? What is the current state – and the future – of social dialogue? Or has the European Commission effectively assumed the role once played by trade unions?

The discussion will be fast-paced and practice-oriented, crossing borders and perspectives to offer actionable insights into the evolving CEE labour market.

The lawyer as a brand: how to stand out in a saturated marketplace? Building trust, credibility, visibility and a strong personal brand within ethical and legal boundaries

Our clients are inundated with articles, LinkedIn/blog posts and webinar invites. We know that personal branding is no longer optional, but what is the most effective way to go about it, without diminishing your professionalism or the legal profession at large? This session explores how to build more than mere visibility and instead develop credibility and genuine trust – online and offline – while also understanding the ethical and legal limits of marketing as a lawyer. Learn what is permitted, what is risky and how to position yourself confidently without crossing professional boundaries – with insights from experts in marketing and in-house roles representing potential clients.

Employment of war veterans and persons with disabilities: global perspectives on inclusive employment - legislative trends and challenges

Across the world, governments are introducing and revising legislation to promote the employment of war veterans and persons with disabilities (PwDs). Ukraine, for example, will introduce stricter quotas and accountability measures for employers in 2026, accompanied by a more employee-centred approach to hiring PwDs and ongoing reforms to create barrier-free environments for those with disabilities, including war-related injuries. Similar legislative efforts and draft laws can be found in other countries, especially as conflicts continue to increase the number of individuals affected by war.

This session will place these developments in a global context, highlighting the growing trend towards more robust legal requirements and greater support for the employment and inclusion of both PwDs and veterans. We will address key questions for employment lawyers and employers worldwide:

- How are changing liability systems pushing employers toward greater compliance?
- In what ways are new laws shifting the focus to employee needs and inclusion?
- What new obligations may arise as the global community responds to the challenges posed by ongoing conflicts?
- How can employers proactively prepare for evolving requirements regarding workplace accessibility and diversity?

Join us as we examine this important international conversation and discuss practical strategies for legal advisors and employers adapting to these changes.

Roundtable: managing multinational employment law compliance in an era of constant change across jurisdictions

With employment laws shifting rapidly across jurisdictions, compliance is more complex than ever. This interactive roundtable brings together experts from various jurisdictions to share strategies for staying ahead of regulatory changes and managing global risk. From tension over return-to-work policies, reputational and staff cohesion issues over geopolitical views and the (mis)use of AI, participants will be invited to work in groups to identify the key challenges facing companies today and how these can be addressed. The session will conclude with each group presenting a list of their proposed challenges and possible solutions. This will be a highly engaging and interactive session.

Closing the gap 2.3 – a debate between 2 in-house and 3 lawyers on pay transparency challenges.

The EU Pay Transparency Directive is reshaping how companies manage remuneration, report pay data and demonstrate equal treatment and the pressure to act is mounting. In this session, two in-house lawyers and three leading practitioners share their first-hand experiences navigating the real-world implementation challenges of pay transparency regulation, with a focus on data readiness, equal value job assessments, and the organisational transformation required to align with the new requirements. We will explore how companies and their legal advisers are building the processes, structures, and culture needed to meet remuneration reporting obligations and what it truly takes to embed pay equality across complex, multinational organisations.

Scio me nihil scire. While AI has all the answers, we need Socrates even more

In an era where Artificial Intelligence is not just a tool but a foundational shift in the global economy, the Socratic paradox—knowing that we know nothing—becomes the ultimate strategic advantage for the modern legal leader. For senior employment lawyers and law firm partners, the AI revolution of 2026 demands more than just technical adaptation; it requires a fundamental unlearning of the traditional legal service model.

This session will explore the dual impact of AI on the future of work. On a micro level, we examine how AI is redefining the “human” element of the legal profession. As algorithms take over the heavy lifting of data and precedent, the value of a senior partner shifts from information processing to high-stakes ethical judgment, strategic navigation, and the management of a newly hybridized workforce.

On a macro level, this transformation is being spearheaded in one of Europe’s most vibrant economic landscapes. Drawing on her leadership at Google Cloud Magda Dziewguć will highlight why Poland has emerged as a premier European hub for technological competence and digital transformation.

Keynote speaker

Magdalena Dziewguć Country Manager, Google Cloud, Warsaw

1630 – 1745

PLENARY SESSION TWO

AI at work: navigating legal and ethical frontiers in a changing world

AI is transforming how companies recruit, hire, manage performance, discipline and restructure their workforce – but not without legal and ethical challenges. This session will explore this transformation, examining some cutting-edge workplace technologies as well as examining usage data and anecdotes from the front lines. AI may (at least arguably) lead to extraordinary gains in efficiency and productivity.

Among the legal challenges to be examined are the privacy and data protection concerns arising from the vast quantities of data collected about employee behaviour. Likewise, employee use of AI tools risks the loss of confidential or trade secret information. Retaining and collecting such data increases potential cybersecurity and data breach risks. Algorithms may reflect the biases inherent in their underlying data, potentially perpetuating inequalities related to age, gender, ethnicity or background. There are fundamental questions of transparency, explainability and fairness when decisions are made by AI with no human input. Indeed, these issues (and others) point to the need for continued human involvement (if not management) and accountability for the recommendations generated by workplace AI tools.

0930 – 1045 PLENARY SESSION THREE

Outsourcing without borders: global services between integration, compliance and emerging restrictions

Global companies face increasing pressure to design outsourcing models that are efficient, legally compliant and sustainable. This session explores how international service structures can be strategically developed and integrated into existing business operations while navigating complex labour, regulatory and ethical requirements. Key issues include:

- labour and employment law risks in international outsourcing (eg, co-employment, transfer of undertakings, worker leasing rules and local employment regulations);
- compliance considerations such as data protection, works council involvement, information and consultation duties and whistleblower requirements;
- economic opportunities and limits of cross-border services, including growing political and regulatory anti-offshoring measures in various jurisdictions;
- governance and practical implementation, focusing on contractual safeguards, oversight mechanisms and effective monitoring structures;
- cross-border employment classification risks; and
- data protection and employee-related privacy requirements across jurisdictions.

This session offers a practical overview of key developments, legal pitfalls and strategic considerations for building future-proof global outsourcing models.

Collective voice in a fragmented world: trade unions, collective bargaining and worker representation in a global context

Trade unions have played a defining role in Polish history, but globally many are facing declining membership and struggling to adapt to rapid changes in the labour market. While some jurisdictions maintain strong union traditions, others see unions losing influence despite increasingly sophisticated statutory protections.

This session explores why these differences exist and what drives the overall drop in union membership. Are unions adapting quickly enough to challenges such as AI, hybrid work reducing physical presence and organisational opportunities, shifting workforce identities, diversity considerations and the expectations of younger generations? How does the tension between collective agreements and the growing focus on individualised solutions impact their relevance?

We will examine how multinational employers can navigate diverse systems of industrial relations across borders, and whether the traditional union role remains crucial – or how it must evolve – to stay relevant in a fragmented and digitally transforming world. Furthermore, the session questions whether the traditional union role is still crucial and explores unions' future significance.

Navigating the right balance between diversity data collection, privacy laws and cultural nuances in a global context

Many companies are committed to advancing the employment of equity-seeking groups and understanding workplace diversity. They monitor diversity metrics internally and increasingly expect their suppliers to collect and share similar data, aiming for a comprehensive approach to inclusion across the supply chain. However, achieving this goal on a global scale brings significant challenges.

Organisations must contend with a complex landscape of privacy laws that differ widely from country to country, including strict restrictions on collecting and processing sensitive personal data. In some jurisdictions, even asking questions about race, ethnicity or other protected characteristics can be prohibited or culturally sensitive, making data collection difficult or even impossible. Employers also face cultural differences in how diversity and equity are understood or prioritised, which can affect both the willingness of individuals to disclose information and the effectiveness of global diversity initiatives.

Legal frameworks and reporting requirements may conflict or lack harmonisation, leading to uncertainty and potential liability when operating across borders. As a result, employers and their legal advisors must navigate challenges such as ensuring legal compliance, building employee trust, maintaining data accuracy and adapting their strategies to respect local expectations. This session will discuss international best practices, risk mitigation strategies and how to strike the right balance between promoting diversity and complying with privacy and cultural norms worldwide.

We solve problems involving aspects of People and Culture.

Transparent fees

We do not overbill or inflate teams to increase fees. Additional specialists are involved only when genuinely necessary. Efficiency, not unnecessary headcount, is our standard.

Plain language

We communicate in clear, straightforward language so clients fully understand what an issue means for their business. We focus on practical implications, not legal jargon or lengthy references.

“Answer first” approach

We start with a clear “yes” or “no”, followed by an explanation and our recommended action. We do not hide behind ambiguity – we take responsibility for giving a clear, decisive answer.

Complementary practices

We combine multiple areas of expertise within one team to deliver faster, end-to-end solutions. This reduces coordination, avoids duplication and improves both speed and quality of advice.

Long-term client relationships

We build lasting relationships – many of our clients have been with us for over a decade and actively recommend us. We understand their businesses, anticipate their challenges and provide consistent, trusted support.

Our practices: Labour and employment law, The Social Insurance Institution, Tax, Litigation, White-collar crime, Compliance, DEI, OSH, GDPR, ESG, Comp&Ben, Immigration and Global Mobility.

Employment & Personal Taxation

We advise on a wide range of employment, compensation and benefits matters, including those arising in the context of restructurings and M&A transactions. By combining expertise in several relevant areas of law – employment, social security and tax – we deliver comprehensive and commercially focused solutions.

Our team works closely with international clients and law firms on multi-jurisdictional projects, ensuring alignment between Polish requirements and global strategies. With extensive experience in cross-border cooperation, we act as a trusted Polish partner – providing clear, practical advice and integrating seamlessly into international teams.
