Michel Barnier calls for two-state solution for Israel and Palestine in IBA opening ceremony speech

by Méganne Tillay

Former Brexit negotiator and French foreign affairs minister Michel Barnier called for EU, US and Middle East leaders to work together towards a peace process and a two-state solution for Israel and Palestine.

In a speech at the IBA opening ceremony on Sunday, Barnier said that security and sovereignty of the state of Israel is "non-negotiable", adding that "we stand on the side of freedom and democracy against barbarity and terrorism".

He added however that a "sustainable peace" in the Middle-East under the control of the United Nations "will only be achieved with the establishment of a Palestinian state".

He was speaking at the opening ceremony of IBA Paris 2023 at the Palais des Congrès. The ceremony also featured a recorded video address by French President Emmanuel Macron.

Macron said the IBA conference would "forge ties to form a living community in the service of law".

He added: "We need this. As you know, France and the world are experiencing a pivotal moment where power struggles are attempting to supplant relations based on law," in referring to the current Ukraine conflict, which "has given rise to crimes that international justice must judge swiftly and severely".

In a wide-ranging speech which emphasised French primacy in the post-Brexit legal and financial order, he said France aimed "to make Paris the leading financial centre in Europe".

"We are children of Roman law, which is sometimes said to be less conducive to export than Anglo-Saxon common law, this French and European law is the one that wrote, yesterday, the global framework for environmental protection; that writes today the rules of our digital globalisation, through the major European regulatory texts, as recent events show us."

IBA launches forum for government and public lawyers

New hub will help connect public sector lawyers from around the world, writes Ben Rigby

Public lawyers have a new home within the International Bar Association, as the IBA opens the forum for government and public lawyers to encourage membership from government and public lawyers worldwide.

The forum builds on the IBA's successful and long-established corporate counsel forum (CCF), which caters to business lawyers in in-house legal practice. By establishing a new hub for government lawyers as a distinct professional category, and as the global voice of the legal profession, the IBA is well-placed to support public sector lawyers and to provide opportunities to connect such practitioners with others in both the public and private sector.

Like the CCF, it will focus on the role and practice of its community, especially around the values and objectives that ground public service, ethics and specialist skills, as well as consideration of public international law issues.

Membership is open to Bar associations, complete or supporting members of the IBA, and individual members of any IBA divisions. The forum will particularly interest practitioners working in government or public entities at domestic, regional or international levels.

The new forum will be launched at the IBA Annual Conference in Paris on Monday at a session co-hosted by Andrew Mackenzie of the Scottish Arbitration Centre, who will also co-chair the forum. Mackenzie said he is honoured to take up the role alongside Federica D'Alessandra, the deputy director of the Oxford Institute for Ethics, Law and Armed Conflict.

Talking to IBA Daily News, he said: "My background is as a government lawyer, so I am delighted to be involved in this important initiative.

"We have been committed to establishing a hub for government and public lawyers from across the globe for some time and established this new IBA committee this year.

"Our inaugural session will take place on Monday at IBA Paris and involves some of the brilliant officers of the forum as speakers – Frances Anderson, Dr Pascal Dutru, Klaus Löber and Andy Beattie."

Anderson, who is the assistant solicitor for the Victoria government in Australia and the forum's co-vice chair, added the session would "provide a new perspective and discuss the role and practice of the government and public lawyer", which he says is "complex and critical". It will also explore what it means to be a government lawyer and "the distinct responsibilities, opportunities and challenges which make this role unique".

European Union bears 'huge responsibility' to help secure peace in Middle East

Macron was introduced by Paris committee co-chairs Jacques Buhart, founder of McDermott Will & Emery's Paris office, and Pascale Lagesse, who leads the employment team at Bredin Prat, and has been the treasurer of the International Bar Association since 2021.

The video of the French president was followed by an address by IBA president Almudena Arpón de Mendivil Aldama who highlighted the IBA's main themes: The impact of AI; the emergence of the environmental, social and governance (ESG) movement and its impact on diversity, equity and inclusion; the attraction and retention of talent; and promoting and defending the rule of law.

More than 6,000 delegates from across the world will assemble at the conference, which marks the IBA's 75th anniversary.

Prominent speakers include Nobel Peace Prize winner Lech Wałęsa and prominent futurologist Zack Kass, architect of ChatGPT's go-to-market strategy, among a host of other top names.

The conference is being billed as a forum "to discuss, support and advance legal reform and social justice" in the context of "continuing conflicts in Europe and the Middle East, disruptions to the energy market and the climate crisis".

In a Q&A session, Barnier also said that the European Union holds "huge responsibility" to ensure peace in the region and find a solution to this long-standing conflict.

He further urged the EU to act with the US and other players in the region to work for a two-state solution.

The former Brexit negotiator also discussed Brexit and the future of the EU at length in both his speech and the Q&A.

"The EU is still a very fragile project, and member states need to be careful and correct mistakes where they happen," he said in response to a question from a French lawyer.

He added: "Brexit was not probable but it happened," urging EU leaders and citizens to be for improbable events.

Lost in the jungle of French employment law?

Let's make it clear!

Middle East Law Firm of the Year 2023

Since

Some of my dearest friendships have been built because of the IBA

Immediate IBA past president Sternford Moyo addresses the opening ceremony at last year's conference in Miami

Melissa Davis, who is attending her 11th annual conference, provides some tips for first timers on how to navigate IBA 2023 Paris

The IBA Annual Conference brings together thousands of international lawyers and professionals across the sector to build brands and referral networks while also seeking to protect and support the rule of law.

Attending an event like this takes significant budget, so it's important to get the best out of it. The steps you take before you walk through the door, register and get your name badge are at least as important as what you do at the event to build a pipeline of referrals.

If you haven't thought about your personal brand, then now is the time to do so. In the legal sector people buy people, so your brand is vital for building friendships that can lead to business growth. This is about taking responsibility over how you present yourself – and how people perceive you. It's about showing what makes you unique and what you're about. It's about your personality, your skills and, most of all, it should be about being true to the real you.

There are more than 6,000 delegates at IBA 2023 Paris. At the end of an evening, if you're looking at hundreds of business cards, you're not going to remember everyone. So how do you ensure people remember you?

Remember to be authentic: your 'in person' profile should be the same as your online profile. You may have connected with people in advance and people will want to connect with you online after meeting. They want to see the same person in both places.

Social media

Be generous and active on social media throughout the week, following speakers, liking and commenting on their posts, making it likely they will reciprocate. Don't forget to include the official conference hashtags to monitor and link to what others are posting. Sharing that 'I'm here' on social media means you can invite attendees to meet up with you over the course of the week, while also showing the market you take time out to stay up to date on emerging industry trends.

Note the speakers at sessions you want to attend and reach out to them to say you're looking forward to meeting with them. Read through the attendees list and highlight the people you want to reach out to and meet up with. If you're a speaker, connect with fellow panellists and leave 30 minutes free after the session to chat with attendees. Consider collaborating with fellow panellists to produce a follow-up summary article about the session.

Make use of the QR code within the LinkedIn app to connect with people in person. Tap the search bar at the top of your home screen when you open the app for them to be able to scan the code and find your profile.

Mentors

If this is your first IBA, then ask for help. There are plenty of mentors (please come and find me) who will introduce you to other people, take you to parties, and hopefully eventually help you become a committee member.

I started my journey in the law firm management committee in 2015 (three years after joining the IBA) and then in 2020. I also joined the European regional forum and became part of the mental wellbeing task force. I then volunteered my time to support the 50:50 by 2030 project. This enabled me to be an advocate of issues that matter to me in the sector, in this case diversity and mental wellbeing.

The IBA isn't something you just go to once. Building business relationships that can lead to a referral network takes time. Keith Oliver, head of international at Peters & Peters, who has been attending IBA annual conferences since 2001 and who organises the annual football match, says: "The IBA Conference provides an unparalleled opportunity to meet fellow practitioners from across the world – where you'll not only reunite with old friends but make many new ones from our community."

Pace yourself

Finally, remember to pace yourself – it's OK if you don't go to every session you planned to attend. You will have the opportunity to contact attendees or the speakers to ask about what you missed. With thousands of legal professionals in attendance, it's important to be on top form for subsequent sessions and events.

We hope your experience mirrors that of Christine Blaise-Engel, a partner at leading French law firm Fidal, who says: "For me, the power of networking has enabled me to find my place in the global legal community. Being involved with the IBA has supercharged my career and opened doors to a huge range of business relationships – and friendships – that I value greatly and are invaluable to my working life."

And finally... let me introduce myself: I am a business leader, a mother to the most phenomenal super-hero daughter who has special needs, a campaigner on disability issues and protecting children during and after parental separation, a mental health ambassador and in addition some of my dearest friendships have been built because of the IBA.

Melissa Davis is founder and CEO of MD Communications and a member of the IBA leadership academy faculty, the IBA European regional forum (ERF), and the ERF mental wellbeing task force.

IBA Paris committee co-chairs Jacques Buhart and Pascale Lagesse preview IBA Paris 2023 in conversation with Méganne Tillay

How does it feel to be hosting the IBA as co-chairs of the IBA Paris committee?

Jacques Buhart: I remember having met Pascale at the IBA conference in Delhi in 1997. With the IBA London office we first talked about holding the conference in Paris again in 2012. It was set to take place in 2021 but, due to the pandemic, that was postponed to this year. To be hosting it in Paris again after almost 30 years means a lot.

Jacques Buhart

Pascale Lagesse: It's a big honour to be hosting it this year. For me, it's a full-circle moment because I attended my first IBA in 1995, which was in Paris as well. I was a young associate at Gide Loyrette Nouel at the time. Coming back after all these years as co-chair [of the host committee] with Jacques, and as the treasurer of the IBA, is very symbolically important for me.

What IBA events and/or guest speakers are you personally most excited about this year and why?

Buhart: I'm most excited and proud about the quality of guest speakers, such as President Macron providing a video speech at the opening ceremony, Michel Barnier, the senior vice president and general counsel of the World Bank, Christopher Stephens, and more excellent international colleagues speaking throughout the week.

Lagesse: I'm excited for the opening ceremony at the Carrousel du Louvre where Jacques and I will give a speech*. It is very unique and the venue is not usually open in the evening, but this year attendees will be able to visit part of the museum after the ceremony. It promises to be very special.

What are some events attendees should look forward to the most?

Buhart: There will be a showcase chaired by IBA president Almudena Arpón de Mendiál Aldama about women leading law firms. Speakers at the session include Farmida Bi, chair, Europe, Middle East and Asia, Norton Rose Fulbright, Aedamar Comiskey, senior partner and chair, Linklaters, and Paris-based Marie-Aimée De Dampierre, chair of Hogan Lovells. It's just incredible how far the industry has come in that aspect.

Lagesse: Jacques and I are from the Legal Practice Division (LPD) tradition so I must mention the LPD showcase about fashion and the metaverse on Tuesday. This is going to be a big event all about high tech and fashion in Paris.

this event'

The host committee party on Wednesday night will also be special. It will be attended by Parisian firms and the French Minister of Justice, Eric Dupond-Moretti. Attendees should expect a cheese and wine night with products from all French regions in the beautiful building of the Tribunal de Commerce. It's great to see all of us competitors coming together for this.

What have been the biggest challenges organising the IBA this year?

Buhart: The biggest challenge was to postpone the event from 2021 to 2023. For us, this year wasn't just about dealing with the practical issues, it was also in taking care of the details for attendees. But we managed to get an amazing host committee which worked wonderfully.

Lagesse: With my treasurer hat on, I'd say keeping the budget at a reasonable level while providing the best experience was a challenge because Paris is a very expensive city for these events.

What would you like attendees to take from this year's IBA?

Buhart: The quality of the committee. The IBA is often seen as a networking event but really, the sessions are at the core of this event. There are lawyers and speakers preparing hours to deliver high-quality panel sessions, showcases and it's important to attend the legal sessions.

Lagesse: And we need to mix that with the fact that Paris is a 'ville-musee' (museum city), now more than ever before. All the monuments and museums have been refurbished, it's beautiful and it only takes 10 minutes on the metro from the conference to the city centre so everyone will have a chance to enjoy the city, too. It will be memorable for many.

What has been one of your favourite memories from previous IBA Conferences?

Buhart: For me, it was the speech from the president of Mexico, Vincente Fox, at the IBA in Cancun in 2001. He came out on stage wearing a leather jacket. I will never forget that moment. A few days later it rained incessantly, unfortunately.

Lagesse: I was very impressed by the Delhi Conference in 1997. It was like attending an incredible Indian wedding. There were a thousand women wearing sarees, elephants and tigers in the gardens, it was just unbelievable.

Pascale Lagesse

What are your personal recommendations for IBA attendees for Parisian sightseeing?

Buhart: It's not a recommendation but a piece of advice: traffic in Paris is a nightmare! You will get to your destination faster on the metro, cycling or walking. The city is becoming very pedestrian-friendly, and there are bicycles you can rent. Those are the best ways to see and move around, otherwise you will be late at your meetings.

Lagesse: For overseas colleagues who are coming to Paris for the first time, I would encourage them not to limit themselves to seeing the main sites such as the Eiffel Tower. There are so many other places in the city that are worth visiting including Montmartre, Saint-Germain-des-Prés, and so many streets with hidden gems.

Jacques Buhart founded McDermott, Will & Emery's Paris office 12 years ago, and his practice focuses on M&A and antitrust. He served as chair of the International Bar Association's section on business law (SBL) between 2001 to 2003. Pascale Lagesse leads the employment team at Bredin Prat, and has been the treasurer of the International Bar Association since 2021.

IBA Daily News Paris guide – part one

The inside track on the best places to eat, drink and party in Paris courtesy of IBA delegates.

From hidden gems to late night drinking spots, Paris has something for everyone, writes Ben Rigby

Paris is known for its rich history, iconic landmarks, and, of course, its culinary delights. We asked a panel of IBA conference regulars and Paris-based lawyers to recommend their favourite restaurants and bars in the city that are perfect for lawyers. Bon appétit!

Best places to eat and shop?

Janice Feigher, founder of Feigher Dispute Resolution, recommends the Grands Magasins area, combining shopping and lunch in central Paris. She recommends the Bleu Coupole, situated under the magnificent cupola of the Printemps Haussmann. Two other restaurants get the nod; Lazare, a brasserie run by top French chef Eric Fréchon near the St Lazare train station, and Le Soufflé, which is near Tuileries, fully dedicated to the soufflé recipe.

Breakfast, coffee or brunch?

What about places for non-alcoholic refreshments? Feigher recommends the Trocadéro area for a wide range of options. Angelina, within the Musée du Louvre, is worth a visit to taste their signature hot chocolate l'Africain. For brunch, she recommends Colorova, a hybrid restaurant and coffee-pastry shop in the Bon Marché area that offers breakfast service in the morning and a chic canteen at lunchtime.

Claire Pauly, of counsel at Jones Day in Paris, also recommends Café Nuances, which has three outlets in the city.

Restaurants with stars

For those seeking a prestigious Michelin star restaurant, there is the Palais Royal in the beautiful gardens of the same name, while Les Climats, described as a paradise of Burgundy wine, is perfect after a visit to the Musée d'Orsay.

Sneha Ashtikar Roy, head of marketing at Jus Mundi, recommends Le Fumoir bar, near the Louvre, but also flags L'Arôme which has one Michelin star, tucked away in the vibrant neighbourhood of the 16th district.

Fabio Trevisan, a partner and head of dispute resolution at Bonn Steichen & Partners (BSP), says the best soufflé in town can be found at Le Récamier, named after Juliette Récamier, a famed 19th century French socialite.

Paris institutions

Alex Potts KC, a barrister at 4 Pump Court, recommends two Parisian institutions: Vaudeville and L'As du Fallafel, saying "they always provide excellent food, service and ambience in their respectively unique ways".

Arbitrators Louise Barrington and Barry Leon both recommend Au Vieux Paris d'Arcoles in the shadow of Notre Dame. The restaurant is situated in a centuries-old ivy-covered house with rustic furniture and hearty cuisine Auvergnoise, with what Barrington calls a "wonderful neighbourly ambience" because it encourages guests to descend to the cellar to choose their own wine. "It's my home away from home," she said.

Pauly also recommends two of her favourite restaurants: Colvert, in the 6th district or Caché, in the 20th. The former is especially good for those who enjoy eating game, while the latter offers innovative seasonal fish and seafood dishes inspired by the Mediterranean.

And finally...

The author has a recommendation of his own. Café L'Imprimerie does the best brunch ever. Put this on your must-do list!

No liability whatsoever by the IBA or Global Legal Post is accepted for any of the recommendations mentioned in this article.
