Energy and infrastructures – Roll-out and practical implementation of the French Italian Treaty ('Trattato del Quirinale')

The current geopolitical tragic and unprecedented energy crisis, together with the decarbonisation objectives under the Paris Agreements constitute a possible 'tsunami' on the European energy landscape, with the goal to achieve energy autonomy. In this context, network infrastructures (electricity interconnections, gas pipelines, storage, LNG terminals) and fast development of alternative energy sources such as renewables and hydrogen become fundamental and can only be addressed through a cross border pan-European approach. The collaborations between France and Italy in the field of energy and the management of the repercussions of the increase in energy costs in this period have been the focus of talks between the two countries in the path towards the signature of the French Italian Treaty 'Trattato del Quirinale', which reaffirmed and consolidated the relations between Italy and France.

1200 – 1330 SESSION TWO

ESG with focus on due diligence and litigation

The past years have seen a constant rise in the breadth and the scope of both national and European ESG regulation applicable to corporations. Those include notably enhanced extra-financial reporting, increased consideration for environmental and social issues in the decision-making process (e.g. Pacte law in France and developments on corporate interest, raison d'être and missions), board and management diversity, stringent say-on-pay procedures, fight against corruption and new due diligence requirements (duty of vigilance and annual vigilance plans). In parallel, investors' demand for accountability on ESG matters is increasing dramatically, as evidenced by the development of ESG-based activism campaigns as well as the new practice of "Say on Climate" resolutions at general meetings of shareholders. Investment funds are themselves subject to such enhanced scrutiny with broader disclosure obligations on their investment decision-making process and due diligence policies in connection with sustainability risks and factors. In this fast-changing legal environment, with the proliferation of regulation and standards, corporations and their board members and managers are facing new potential liabilities. ESG-related lawsuits – which were in the past mostly directed at States and government actions – are increasingly common and take many forms, with NGOs, associations of shareholders and other interested parties acting against large companies with cases seeking not only compensation but also more structural policy changes.

Metaverse and NFT

Many years ago, the idea that a GIF or a JPEG file would be considered a piece of art, or a fashion item collectible was unthinkable, but today they are known as NFTs, crypto investment assets with a market that surpassed 49 billion dollars in 2021. These unique digital tokens are bought and sold on the internet and many tech investors, luxury firms, but also artists and designers have seen huge profits. Meanwhile, the NFT market has been spreading and heavily also developing thanks to the expansion of the Metaverse (or the Metaverses, as there are currently a few dozen accessible). France and Italy have been among the first countries in the world to enact new legislation on new technologies (including blockchain) and are certainly the two main countries for fashion and luxury-related items. Our panel aims at giving an overall picture of the Metaverse and the NFT market, of how the business and the practice are evolving, not without mentioning the state of art of the legislation and the position of the legal scholars in the two jurisdictions. In particular, we will focus on certain key IP topics in this field, leveraging on recent US case-law.
